

MOBILIZING THE NORTH

Each community will first work to design a workshop that meets their specific needs. They will decide what resources they need to be sent to them in through these workshops.

A recycled shipping container is retrofitted into a workshop that is customized to meet each community's specific needs. The shops are mobile to reach all members of the community.

Each community will be mobilized to create their own workshops. They will create a network across Nunavik linking these workshops by sharing solutions between communities.

“Mobilizing the North” is an open ended project that promotes portable workshops that are designed by and for Inuit communities to demonstrate and share knowledge. Through the implementation of these workshops across Nunavik Inuit communities will become more connected and self sufficient.

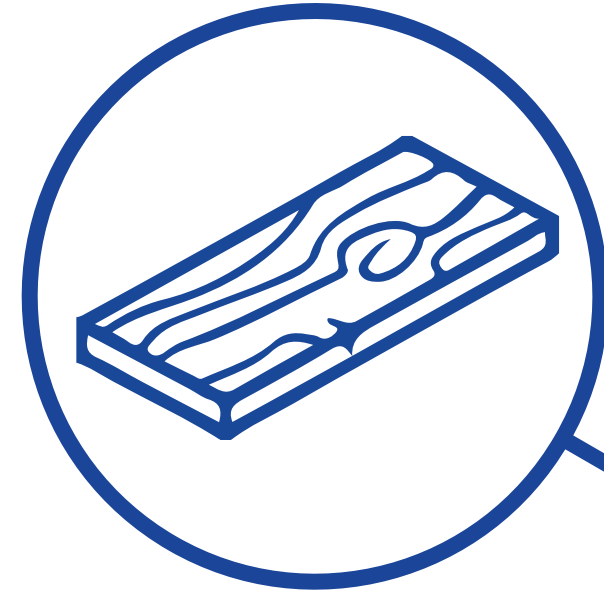

Give an Inuk a building and you won't meet their needs, Support an Inuit community workshop and they will meet their own needs.

NUNAVIK

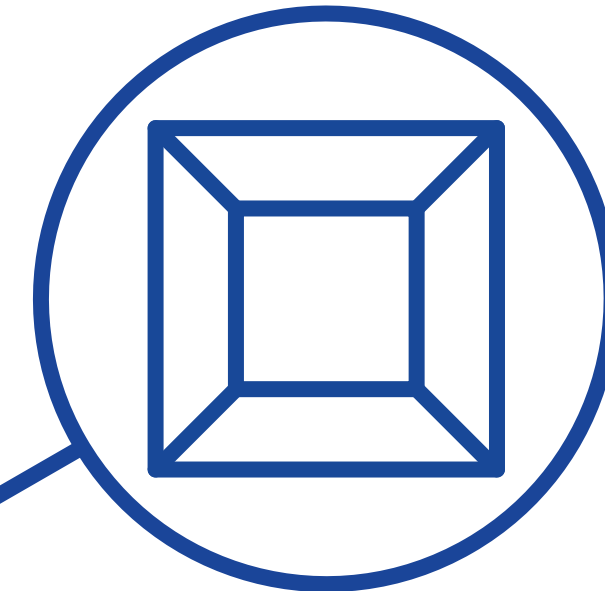

Making available quality materials in Nunavik will allow communities to design and construct their community however they choose.

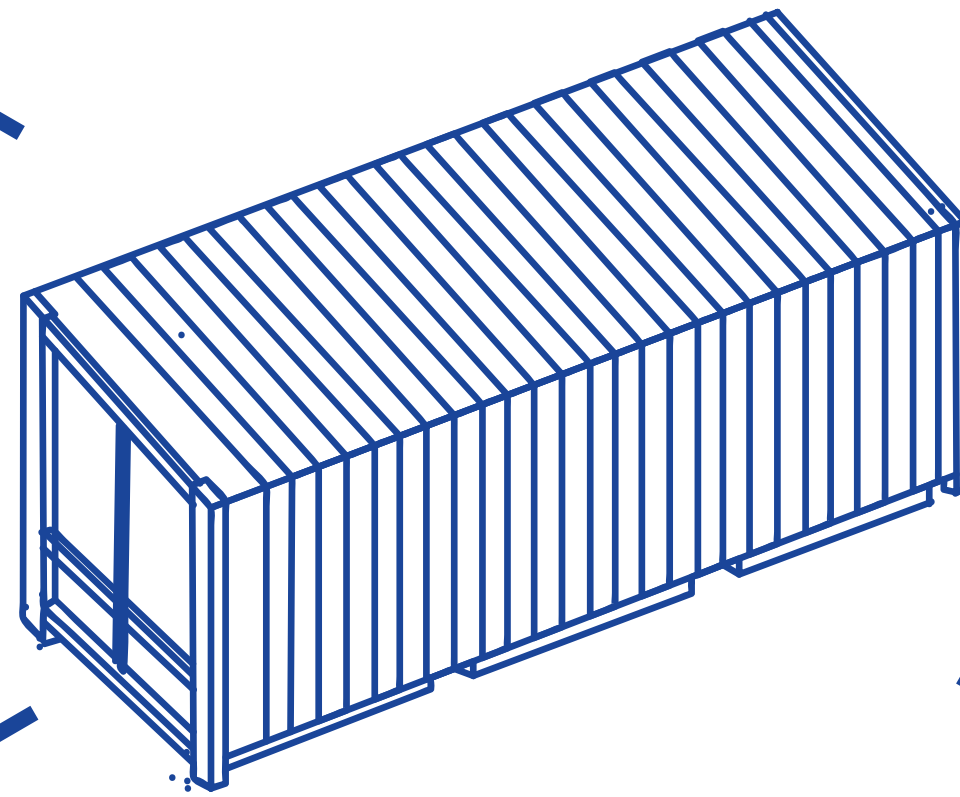

Each community will establish their own priorities

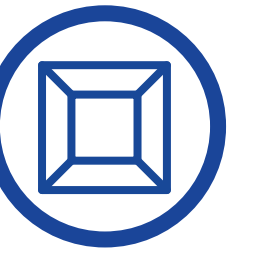

These workshops are a place where traditional knowledge can be passed between elders and youth through craft and making.

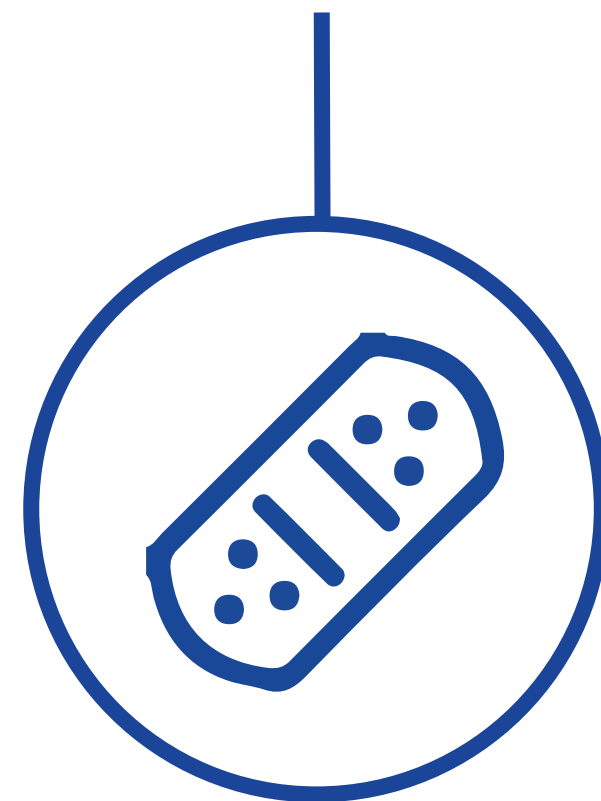

Making available the needed building tools will allow the Inuit people to expand upon their current building methods styles throuh experimenting with new and traditional techniques.

Making available a shared mobile space, deticated to de-sign-build, allows more of the community to participate. Making design build more accessible. promotes future creativity.

This workshop is to be a forum through which the needed knowledge of home weatherization and home maintenance is shared, enabling communities to become more healthy and self sustainable.
